5.—Canadian Pacific Flagship Empress of Scotland which carried Their Excellencies to Canada.

Their Excellencies Viscount and Viscountess Willingdon made many friends on their voyage from England to Quebec on board the Canadian Pacific flagship Empress of Scotland, when His Lordship came here in October to become Governor-General of the Dominion. They paid visits to all parts of the vessel chatting with new settlers for Canada and presiding at the various functions that take place aboard ship during an ocean voyage. Sharing their popularity was their Cairn Terrier, Misty, who was friends with everyone except perhaps a plump Chow who looked to him as though he might develop into a dangerous rival.

Canada's thirteenth Governor-General had a fine reception when the ship docked at Quebec. He struck a tactful note when he told his French-Canadian audience he too could claim descent from the Normans and that French blood flowed in his veins equally as in theirs. "In this country," he said, "the descendants of our two races have worked for many years under the British Crown for a common purpose and object, namely, to promote the welfare and prosperity of the people of this wonderful country.

First impressions are vital in establishing successful relations and perhaps no impression gave so cordial an effect as one of His Lordship's speeches aboard the Empress of Scotland, which was broadcast all over Canada. In it he said: "I wonder if I may venture to add one word of rather an intimate and personal character. It is this—in wishing all my fellow-passengers the best of good luck in the future and all health and happiness they can possibly expect and obtain, may I ask them one and all to give an occasional thought—a kindly thought—to one who is about to undertake very grave responsibilities for the British Empire in the great Dominion of Canada."

That is the true democratic note, sounded with modesty and feeling and sure of an unreserved response throughout the length and breadth of Canada.

Teachers' Con. at Wainwright

IMPRESSIONS OF WAINWRIGHT TEACHERS' CONVENTION

The seventh annual convention of the teachers of the Wainwright Inspectorate was held in the Wainwright High School on October 7 and 8.

Both days were filled with interesting features and the sessions were fairly well attended.

In giving up a short review of the convention I shall endeavor to touch on the parts which seemed to me most interesting.

After the invocation by the Rev. Love of Wainwright and the address of the president, Mr. Hollinshead B.A. Principal of Wainwright High School, Mr. M. O. Nelson, B.A. Inspector of Schools gave an enlightening address on the development of a child and its effect with regard to the child's attitude towards the teacher.

He gave five stages, infancy, early childhood, later childhood, Plateau or childhood and adolescence. In the first two there is faith in the teacher in the next two hero worship. In the fourth stage especially, where physical development is arrested about the ages nine to thirteen, there is marked hero worship with an increased activity of mind. In early adolescence, self interest predominates. It is here the teacher can do least and most care must be taken not to gain the child's displeasure. During later adolescence when full development takes place the teacher is a helper and friend and can be a great influence in the choosing of a life work.

On Thursday evening after the musical programme. Professor Adams of the University of Alberta gave an interesting address on a theme somewhat similar to Mr. Nelson's. He dealt with the thoughts of some great men about their teachers and the influence that the teachers had had upon their lives.

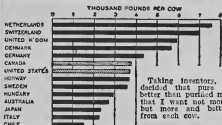

Some great men were fortunate in their teachers as example Burns, Samson Samuel Johnson and Goldsmith. These men have immortalized their teachers in their writings.

Professor Adams drew contrasts in schools and school masters. There was Miss Pinkerton, prim, dignified, intelligent, bowing to the rich and her consequent effect on the natures of Amelia and Becky Sharp. This was Thackeray's portrayal of the school of that day. Then there was Dickens' idea as shown in David Copperfield when "Mr. Stimpson" was the order of the day. Then in contrast to the school in Vanity Fair here is the one which formed the theme of Barrie's play

THE DAIRYMAN'S CALENDAR

As a progressive Dairyman desiring to secure maximum profits from my milk herd, I realize the necessity of adhering to an organized schedule of care, feeding and handling.

AVERAGE MILK PRODUCTION PER COW IN DIFFERENT COUNTRIES

Taking inventory, I have found that my milk is better than purified milk and that I want not more cows, but more and better milk from each cow.

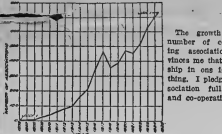

My first step should be the selection of a true type herd sire—a selection which should always command great care and good judgment.

Proper selection of dams also will bring its own rewards in more milk, better milk and better animals.

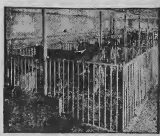

The comfort of the animal is important. Thorough cleaning aided by petticoat clipping about flanks, udders and underlines during stable months and all over the body when turning out in the spring shall be part of my program. Clean animal, clean milk with low bacteria count.

The growth in the number of our testing associations confirms me that membership in one is a good thing. It places my association full support and co-operation.

Proper feeding is essential. Therefore I shall always provide a carefully balanced ration to my herd, as well as a plentiful supply of pure, clean water.

Any cow in my herd suspected of being a brawler or otherwise lacking in necessary qualifications, shall be culled as a fair, but thorough test. What I gain on my herd must come back to me as a profit.

During the hot months, whenever possible, I shall supply my herd with a cool, clean, outdoor resting place, where they can chew their cud in peace and ruminate on the wisdom of being a profitable rather than a parasite.

A dirty condition like that pictured here shall never grow in my herd. I shall clean, scrub and disinfect every animal, clip and clean their udders, and keep my udders in a dump cloth.

A clean herd, clean udders, clean milk, clean water at the best price and no milking machine as long as I can get my milk by the pail. I shall enforce rigidly.

The dairy of tomorrow that buys my milk must have quality and sanitation as much as I do. They must carry on from the point beyond which I have no control.

Then when my milk is bottled I shall know I am repaid for my efforts. I shall get more milk and more money for my milk and the gospel of clean and better milk shall spread throughout the land.

CHAPTER XLII Kit Carson Rides

Following the recession of the snow, men began to push westward in the Platte in the great spring gold rush of 1849. In the forefront of these, outpacing them in this tireless fashion now passed westward the greatest traveller of his day, the hunter and scout, Kit Carson. The new post of Fort Kearney on the Platte; the old one, Fort Laramie in the foothills of the Rockies—he touched them soon as the grass was green; and as the sun warmed the bunch grass slopes of the North Platte and the Sweet-water, so that his horses could paw out a living, he crowded on westward. He was a month ahead of the date for the wagon trains at Fort Bridger.

"How, Chardon!" said he as he drove in his two light packs, riding alone as was his usual way evading Indian eyes as he of all men best knew how.

"How, Kit! You're early. Why?" The trader's chief clerk turned to send a boy for Vasquez, Bridger's partner. "Light, Kit, and eat."

"Where's Bridger?" demanded Carson. "I've come out of my country to see him. I have government mail—for Oregon."

"For Oregon? Mon Dieu! But Jeem!"—he spread out his hands—"Jeem, he's dead, we'll think. We do not know. Wow we know the good news. Maybe-so we know why Jeem he's gone?" "Gone? When?"

"Las' H' August-Settember. H'all of an' at once he'll took the trail after the h'emigrant train as year. He'll caught him h'on Fort Hall; he'll heard it. But then he go h'on with these h'emigrant be-yon' the fork for California'. He'll not come back. No one know what has become of Jeem. He'll been dead, maybe-so."

"Yes! Maybe-so not! That old rat knows his way through the mountains, and he'll take his own time. You think he did not go on to California?"

"We'll know he'll didn't."

Carson stood and thought for a time.

"Well, it's bad for you, Chardon."

"How you mean, M'sieu Kit?"

"Eat your last square meal. Saddle your best horse. Drive four packs and two saddle mounts along."

"Qui? And Where?"

"To Oregon!"

"By the authority of the Government, I command you to carry this packet on to Oregon this season, as fast as safety may allow. Take a man with you—two, pick up any help you need. But go through."

"I cannot go further west myself, for I must get back to Laramie. I had counted on Jim, and Jim's post must see me through. Make your plans to start to-morrow morning. I'll arrange all that with Vasquez."

"But, M'sieu Kit, I cannot—"

"But you shall, you must, you will! If I had a better man I'd send him but you are to do what Jim wants done."

"Mais, oui, of course."

"Yes. And you'll do what the President of the United States commands."

"Bon Dieu, Kit!"

"That packet is over the seal of the United States of America, Chardon. It carries the signature of the President. It was given to the Army to deliver. The Army has given it to me. I give it to you, and you must go. It is for Jim. He would know. It must be placed in the hands of the Circuit Judge acting under the laws of Oregon, whoever he may be, and wherever. Find him in the Wilamette country. Your pay will be more than you think, Chardon. Jim would know. Dead or alive, you do this for him."

"You can do thirty miles a day. I know you as a mountain man. Ride! To-morrow I start east to Laramie—and you start west for Oregon!"

And in the morning following two riders left Bridger's for the trail. They parted, each waving a hand to the other.

CHAPTER XLIII

The Killer Killed

A rough low cabin of logs, hastily thrown together, housed through the winter months of the Sierra foothills the two men who were in the warm days of early June sat by the primitive fireplace cooking a midday meal. The older man, thin, bearded, who now spun a side of venison ribs on a cord in front of the open fire was the mountain man, Bill Jackson, as anyone might tell who had ever seen him, for he had changed but little.

That his companion younger, bearded, dressed also in buckskins, was Will Banion it would have taken closer scrutiny even of a friend to determine so much had the passing of these few months altered him in appearance and in manner. Once light of mein, now he never smiled at all. For hours he would seem to go about his duties as an automaton. He spoke at last to his ancient and faithful friend, kindly as ever, and with his own alertness and decision.

"Let's make it our last meal on the Trinity, Bill. What do you say?"

"Why? What's eatin' ye bo? Gittin' restless agin'."

"Yes, I want to move."

"Most does."

"We've got enough, Bill. The last month has been a crime. The spring snows uncovered a fortune for us, and you know it!"

"Oh, yes, eight hundred in one day ain't had for two men that never saw a gold pan a year ago. But she ain't pestered yet. With what we've learned, an' what we know, we kin stay in here an' git so rich that hit shore makes me git ter think o' trappin' beaver, even before 1836, when the heavier market busted. Why, riah? Will, hit's like on say, so damned easy! I lay awake nights plannin' how ter spend my share o' this pile. We must have fifty-sixty thousand dollars o' dust buried under the floor, don't ye think?"

Farm Notes

CULLING THE UNPROFITABLE LAYERS

(Experimental Farms Note)

As the title of this article suggests, culling will be discussed only in so far as unprofitable layers are concerned.

The value of this practice as a means toward flock improvement increasingly being appreciated by the average farmer. The severity with which he applies the production or progeny test to other branches of livestock, is however, greatly modified when considering poultry. Proper culling will reduce the cost of production; more eggs per bird will also be obtained, and a cash return received for birds sold for meat. By culling the flock, there is more space available for the birds that are laying and there is a greater opportunity for them to get their share of the feed. The best layers are also retained and the likelihood of undesirable birds being placed in the breeding pens the following spring is reduced.

Culling may be commenced as early as July and be continued, with profit, until September. When a decrease in production occurs in July, each member of the flock should be carefully handled and those responsible for the reduction eliminated. From September onward, moulting will compel a halt in culling operations, but by this time least profitable layers will have been removed.

A production record obtained by the use of the trap nest is the best evidence of a bird's laying capacity. The hen that has stopped laying, however, exhibits some peculiarities, and easily distinguishable peculiarities. Her vent shrivels up, assumes a dull colour and becomes dry. It is no longer moist as when she is laying, and the skin in the region of the vent becomes dry and hard. Legs, beak and skin is also an index of a nest-frequenting habit. Breeds highly pigmented in these parts—as Leghorns, Barred Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds—show a loss of this pigment towards the end of the summer after heavy laying. The return of the pigment to all of these parts requires as long as three months to be complete, so that the importance of attending methodically to the practice of culling is, therefore, very important, particularly from the standpoint of feed consumed.

Culling should embrace the removal of birds showing a lack of vigor, low vitality or other serious defects. By eliminating such individuals, the general health of the flock is not endangered, for, with many poultry diseases, an ounce of prevention is better than a ton of cure.

Ever notice the print getting indistinct when reading with lamp light. If you are over the forty mark you likely have. Some notice it much before forty, others not till some years later but it eventually gets us all.

SECURING A PROFITABLE LAMB CROP

(Experimental Farm Note)

The value of a lamb crop depends upon the number of lambs raised and the price realized for them. The first essential, therefore, is a large number of strong healthy lambs. At the Experimental Station at Rosthern, where sheep have been kept since 1915, varying results have been obtained in different years, the method of feeding being the factor chiefly responsible for success or failure.

Pastures are usually poor in late Summer, and in those years when the ewes were continued on such feed till after breeding, there were few twins and a larger number of ewes did not breed; whereas in those years when the ewes were separated from the lambs in September and put on good feed till bred, most of the lambs were strong and there was a large proportion of twins. During the first few years of experiment with sheep at Rosthern many of the lambs had goitre and died, but any year that a little potassium iodide was fed to the pregnant ewes there was no goitre in the resulting lamb crop. When no succulent feed was given the ewes especially after lambing, the milk flow soon dropped and the lambs failed to develop and in some cases starved. The best results in keeping up the milk flow were secured in the spring of 1926, and this was the only time that ensilage was fed the ewes. It is more difficult to care for the March and early April lambs than those dropped in late April and May, but the early well-developed lambs will find an easier and higher market.

Summarized, the Station recommends the following practices in securing a successful lamb crop:— Wean the lambs in September and feed the ewes so that they are gaining during the breeding season. Administer a little potassium iodide to the pregnant ewes. Use a reliable brand of iodized salt or a home-mixture with 3 or 4 ounces potassium iodide per hundred pounds of salt. Dissolve the iodide in a little water and sprinkle it over the dry salt. Feed turnip or ensilage or both to the ewes both before and after lambing, till they get on the grass. If facilities are favourable for taking care of the lambs, breed to have lambs dropped in March and early April.

Letters to the Editor

Edgerton, Alta, Oct. 15th 1926

Editor of the Chauvin Chronicle,
Dear Sir:

Rumours have been spread abroad that both the President and Secretary of the Chauvin-Edgerton Livestock Co-operative Marketing Association have at different times sold stock to Mr.
Ben Merkle, the cattle buyer. As there is not a particle of truth in these statements since neither the secretary nor president have the slightest desire to dispose of their stock in this way, as they are firm believers in the co-operative system of selling the product of the farm, the only reason we can conceive for the spread of such statements is with the idea of killing the farmers' co-operative movement. Evidently the "Movement" is feared in certain quarters which we naturally expected it would be. We wish to point out however that opponents who will descend to such means of opposition, will not hesitate to take unfair advantage of those they have dealings with.

The farmer who seeks to the private dealer can not blame the dealer for taking every fair advantage to buy his cattle at the lowest possible price. The remedy lies in establishing our own machinery through which to sell our own products. This we already have in the Provincial Livestock Pool with which our association has a contract. The farmer has everything to gain and nothing to lose by making use of our machinery for he receives all his stock brings him on the open market minus selling costs, and our selling agency is the largest in Canada and has the widest connections.

Yours truly
E. HERBERT SPENCER

"Colleges," where two old ladies Miss Phoebe and Miss Susan start a school to retrieve the family fortunes.

Professor Adams read parts from the latter which brought out clearly the contrast in schools of modern times.

Later on in the sessions Professor Adams gave an interesting lecture on the "Practical in Art"

He does not believe in imaginative drawing as for example landscapes, but says that children should be taught to draw as they see and to examine closely in order to draw accurately what is observed.

Mr. Gorman B.A. Chief Inspector or Schools gave an address on Citizenship. He stressed the fact that in teaching this subject one should begin with what is close to the children and work on to the more difficult.

Miss Helen Keith B.A. gave an interesting address on "The Teaching of Literature." Miss Keith, quoting Shelly gave as a definition the following:

"Literature is a record of the happiest moments of the happiest minds."

She opined that the poet was the picked man of his race, receiving his inspiration from the very highest source.

She brought to our notice the wealth in English Literature shown in the work of such men as Shakespeare, Milton, Tennyson, and Browning. Literature in manycases came to us through the martyrdom of men as, for instance, Dante and Bunyan.

In closing Miss Keith emphasized that in teaching literature one must have two things, love of literature and sincerity of purpose in teaching it.

Mr. Heckbert B.S.A. Vermilion School of Agriculture gave a brief address on School Fairs. He cited the benefits derived from the fairs and progress made in school fairs organized last year.

Dr. Addinell gave a "toothsome" address on the care of the mouth.

Miss McLellan gave an interesting discourse on Picture Study, emphasizing the peasant picture in particular.

Mr. G. Saul gave a short address on Seat Work in ungraded schools.

There were model lessons by Miss Kain, Miss Strong, and Miss Murray.

Several beginners gave speeches on "My First Day at Teaching," which made the rest of us feel quite old and experienced.

From an educational standpoint, I believe the convention was a success and that everyone enjoyed it but what of the helpful side? I have looked back and I fail to see where much of aid to either the busy urban or rural rural teachers have all the grades and some have nine as well, therefore more benefit would seem to me to be gained from going if, for instance, one could be shown a way to get nine grades into one day without teaching overtime, or if we were given ideas whereby geometry might be made clearer to the average Grade IX student.

But perhaps these are problems which only the teacher can solve, and that after all it is better that the intellectual rather than the practical side be stressed in the Annual Teachers' Convention.

"THE COVERED WAGON"

"Yes, more. But if you'll agree I'll sell this claim to the company below us and let them have the rest. They offer fifty thousand flat, and it's the enough—more than enough. I want two things—to get Jim Bridger his share safe and sound; and I want to go to Oregon."

The old man pained in the act of splitting off a deer rib from his roast.

"Ye're one awful damn fool, ain't ye, Will? I did hope ter finish up here, a-brillin' my meat in a yell-gerd fireplace; but no matter how plain an' simple a man's tastes is, allus somethin' comes along ter bust 'em up."

"Well, go on and finish your meal in this plain fireplace of ours, Bill. It has done us very well. I think I'll go down to the sluice a while."

Banion rose and left the cabin, stooping at the low door. Moodily he walked along the side of the steep ravine to which the little structure clung. Below him lay the ripped-open slope where the little stream had been diverted. Below again lay the bared bed of the exploited water course, floor- ed with boulders set in deep gravel at times with seamy dams of flat rock lying under and across the gravel stretches; the bed rocks, aged, holding in its hidden fingers the rich secrets of immemorial time.

Here he and his partner had in a few months of strenuous labor taken from the narrow and un- than most could save in a lifetime of patient and thrifty toil. Yes, fortune had been kind. And it all had been so easy, so simple, so ungratifying, so matter-of-fact. The hillside looked like any other hillside, innocent as a woman's eyes, yet covering how much! Banion could not realize that, young though he was—he was a rich man.

He climbed down the side of the ravine, the little stones rattling under his feet, until he stood on the bared floor of the bed rock which had proved so un- believably prolific in coarse gold.

There was a sharp bend in the ravine, and here the unpaid toil of the little waterway had, ages long, carried and left especially deep strata of gold-stuff gravel.

As he stood, half musing, Will Banion heard, on the ravine side around the bend, the tinkle of a falling stone lazily rolling from one impediment to another. It might be some deer or other animal he thought. He hastened to get a view of the cause, whatever it might be.

And then fate, chance, the goddess of fortune, which some say does not exist, but which all wilderness-seekers know does exist for one instant paused, with Will Banion's life and wealth and happiness lightly a-balance in cold, disdainful fingers.

He turned the corner. Almost level with his own, he looked into the eyes of a crawling man who—stooped, one hand steadying himself against the slant of the ravine, the other below, carrying a rifle—was peering frowningly ahead.

It was an evil face, bearded, aquiline, not unhandsome; but evil in its plain meaning now. The eyes were narrowed, the full lips, drawn close, as though some tense emotion now approached its climax. The appearance was that of strain, of nerves stretched in some purpose long sustained.

And why not? When a man would do murder, when that has been his steady and premeditated purpose for a year, waiting only for opportunity to serve his purpose that purpose itself changed his very lineaments, alters his whole cast of countenance. Other men avoid him, knowing unconsciously what is in his soul, because of what is written on his face.

For months most men had avoided Woodhull. It was known that he was on a man hunt. His questions, his movements, his changes of locality showed that Woodhull was one of those who cannot avoid asseverance needing it for their course sake. Now morose and brooding, now loudly profane, now laughing or now aloof, his errand in these unknown hills was plain. Well, he was not along among men whose depths were loosed. Some time his hour might come.

It had come! He stared now full into the face of his enemy! He at last had found him. Here stood his enemy, unarmed, delivered into his hands.

For one instant the two stood, staring into one another's eyes. Banions advance had been silent. Woodhull was taken as much un- aware as he.

It had been Woodhull's purpose to get a stand above the sluices, hidden by the angle, where he could command the reach of the stream bed where Banion and Jackson last had been working. He had studied the place before, and meant to take no chances. His shot must be sure.

But now in his climbing on the steep hillside, his rifle was in his left hand, downhill, and his footing, caught as he was with one foot half raised, was insecure. At no time these last four hours had his opportunity been so close—or so poor—as precisely now!

He saw Will Banion's eyes, suddenly startled, quickly estimating, looking into his own. He knew that behind his own eyes his whole soul lay bared—the soul of a murdered.

Woodhull made a swift spring down the hill, scrambling, half erect, and caught some sort of stance for the work which now was his to do. He snarled for he saw Banion stoop, unarmed. It would do his victim no good to run. There was time even to exult, and that was much better in a long-deferred matter such as this.

"Now, damn you, I've got you!"

He gave Banion that much chance to see that he was now to die.

Half leaving, he raised the long rifle to its line and touched the trigger.

The report came; and Banion fell. But even as he wheeled and fell, stumbling down the hillside, his flung arm had apparently had gained a weapon. It was not more than the piece of rotten quartz he had picked up and planned to examine later. He flung it straight as Woodhull's face—an act of chance, of instinct. By a hair it saved him.

Firing and missing at a distance of fifty feet, Woodhull remained not to be a murderer in deed. In a flash Banion gathered and sprang toward him as he stood in a half second of consternation at seeing his victim fall and rise again. The rifle carried out the one shot. He flung it down; reached for his heavy knife, raising an arm against a second piece of rock which Banion flung as he closed. He felt his wrist caught in an iron grip, felt the blood gush from his temple was cut by the last missile. And then once more, on the narrow bared floor that but now was patterned in parquet traced in yellow, and soon must turn to red, it came to man and man between them—and it was free!

They fell and stumbled so that neither could much damage the other at first. Banion knew he must keep the impounded hand back from the knife sheath or he was done. Thus close, he could make no escape. He fought fast and furiously, striving to throw, to bend, to beat back the body of man almost as strong as himself and now a mania in rage and fear.

The sound of his rifle shot rang through the little defile. To Jackson, shoving off bits of sweet meat from thumb and knife blade, it meant the presence of a stranger, a friend, or foe, for he knew Banion had carried no weapon him. His own long rifle he snatched from its pegs. At a long, easy lunge he ran along the path which carried across the face of the ravine. His mossed feet made no sound. He saw no one in the creek bed or at the long turn. But now there came a loud, wordless cry which he knew was meant for him. It was Banion's voice.

The two struggling men grappled below him had no notion of how long they had fought, it seemed an age, and the denouement yet another age deferred. But to them came the sound of a voice:

"Git away, Will! Stand back!" It was Jackson.

They both, still gripped looked up the bank. The long barrel of a rifle, foreshortened to a black point, above it a cold eye, fronted and followed them as they swayed. The crooked arm of the rifleman was motionless, save as it just moved that deadly circle an inch this way, an inch back again. Banion knew that this was murder, too, but he knew that naught on earth could stay it now. To guard as much as he could against a last desperate knife thrust even of a dying man, he broke free and sprang back as far as he could, falling prostrate on his back as he did so, tripped by an unseen stone. But Sam Woodhull was not upon him now, was not willing to lose his own 'fe in order to kill. For just one instant he looked up at the death staring down on him, then turned to run.

There was no place where he could run. The voice of the man above him called out sharp and hard.

"Halt! Sam Woodhull, look at me!" He did turn, in horror, in fascination at sight of the Bright Angel. The rifle barrel to his last gaze became a small, round circle large as a bottle top, and around it shone a gringed aura of red and purple light. That might have been the eye.

Steadily as when he had held his friend's life in his hand, sighting five inches above his eyes the old hunter drew now above the eyes of his enemy. When the dry report cut the condensed air of the valley, the body of Sam Woodhull started forward. The small blue hole an inch above the eyes showed the murderer's man hunt done.

GRAND OLD LADY STILL STEPPING

"Charley's Aunt" Given New Life in Screen Version with Syd Chaplin

"Charley's Aunt," the big feature farce with Syd Chaplin which will be shown in Chauvin and Edgerton next Monday and Tuesday respectively is a pictorialization of the celebrated stage play by Brandon Thomas.

As a play, this hilarious vehicle broke all movie making records for the stage.

It is said that the sun never sets on "Charley's Aunt" meaning that it is always being played somewhere in the United States, England, Canada, Australia or some outlying place where good comedy entertainment is enjoyed.

That "Charley's Aunt" is a staple commodity for amusement is remarked by George Bernard Shaw in a recent article in Harper's Magazine in which he states "... my currency is as universal as that of Sherlock Holmes or 'Charley's Aunt' or Mary Pickford or Bill Hart or Charlie Chaplin." Don't miss this picture. It will be shown at Chauvin Oct. 25th and Edgerton Oct. 26th.

The recently organized egg and poultry pool in Saskatchewan has 17,000 members. Egg production in that province is 33,672,263 dozen yearly. Saskatchewan is now the second largest poultry producing province in Canada, Ontario being first.

St. Catharines—The North American celery championship has been awarded to James Little of this city by the American Vegetable Growers' Association, Vancouver, B.C. The high quality of Canadian celery has long been recognized and this new triumph is expected to further stimulate production.

The Australian Cricket Team, heroes of five test matches against England this summer, arrived in Canada on the Canadian Pacific liner Montrose, October 8th. After visiting some of the principal cities in Canada and the United States, the team proceeded to Vancouver where they sailed on M.S. Aorangi for their homes in Australia, October 21st.

For the third year in succession the McKain First Aid Team from New Brunswick, carried off the "Grand Challenge Trophy," emblematic of the eastern lines first aid championship of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The competition was held recently at the Place Viger Hotel in Montreal. Four other teams from points east of Port William competing.

The oldest employee of the Canadian Pacific Railway in point of service, Isaac Guvernment Ogdén, vice-president in charge of finance, celebrated his 82nd birthday October 10th. He has served the Company for 44 years and his business experience goes back to the Civil War days. Mr. Ogdén was the recipient of felicitations from all parts of the Dominion.

General Booth, head of the Salvation Army, sailed recently from Vancouver on the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Canada for Japan. The General will tour Japan, China and Korea. True to his maxim of not touching food for two days previous to a sea voyage, the General contented himself with sipping a little hot water while attending to his correspondence and waiting for the liner to sail.

Toronto—The New York Times is about to invest $25,000,000 in northern Ontario for the production of all of its newsprint—about 550 tons a day. The announcement of this project was made by the secretary of the president, Adolf Ochs, during the journey of both in this city. The site selected for the paper plant is at Kapuskasing where there is already a small sulphite mill in operation. The water power, 75,000 h.p., will be generated from Smoky Falls.

Thirty students from Oxford and Wye Agricultural College, Kent, England, returned home on the Canadian Pacific liner Montclair recently after having assisted in the harvesting of the Saskatchewan crop. These young men were brought out to the Dominion by the Department of Colonization and Development of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and placed on selected Saskatchewan farms by the Women's British Immigration League. The students are resuming their studies in England this fall.

G. Walter Booth, Prosecuting Attorney for the State of Ohio, in an interview in the tourist department of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Montreal recently, stated that American hunters were choosing Canadian hunting grounds in place of those in the United States practically without exception. Americans, he said, were taking one hundred per cent interest in Canadian game resorts. Mr. Booth is at present in Canada on his annual duck hunt near Winnipeg, and also a big game trip in north-western Quebec.

Victor is Twenty head of grade Caddis flies, two years old, from Mayne Island, have been sold to Japanese buyers. This makes a new departure in the sheep industry of the island, being the first of the home production to be sent to Japan.

It is estimated that southern British Columbia will produce 3,217,000 boxes of apples this season, this is about 700,000 boxes more than last year's production. Arrangements are being made for a heavy export business to Great Britain, as well as to the Prairies and Eastern Canada.

A regular airmail service has been established between Osaka in Japan and Darwin in South Manchuria, two Japanese built "Kawanishi" planes being used. This service is daily, and is being sponsored by the "Osaka Maishichi" one of the largest newspapers in Japan whose aviators recently flew to Berlin.

Moosa Jaw—One thousand head of Western Canadian light horses purchased for the Soviet government were assembled here. The horses, which are all light, are being bought for the Russian government with Russian funds placed in Canadian banks for that purpose. A similar purchase was made last year and the repeating of the order indicates satisfaction with the Canadian stock.

The increase in the net profits of the Canadian Pacific Railway for the first eight months of the year ending August 31st is $6,814,896.76, according to a financial statement issued at the headquarters of the Canadian Pacific at Montreal. This is the increase in profits as compared with the profits for the same period in 1925. This increase in the net earnings of the company in 1925 is stated at $12,891,384.57.

"Hell-Roaring Canyon," the scene of a dramatic incident in John Murray Gibbon's new novel "Eyes of a Gypsy" is the actual name of a remote valley in the Canadian Pacific Rockies as known to the guides and hunters, although the Geographic Board of the Canadian Government has just changed it to a less romantic name—"Numa Creek." The reason for the change in name is that there is another Hell Roaring Canyon in the Rockies which claims a prior right to the name.

The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, one of the oldest military organizations in the United States, being founded as an offshoot of the Artillery Company of London, in 1630, held their 28th annual field day and march past at Montreal, arriving at the Canadian Pacific Place Viger Station on October 2nd. About 250 members of this organization, representing the oldest families in the State of Massachusetts, took part in this event.

"Dean Inge has a very imperfect appreciation of the feeling of India towards England, when he prophesies that India's attitude to the Mother Country in the event of a future crisis, is doubtful," declared Diwan Bahadur Sir T. Vijayarajadasa, who presided at the luncheon given for England on the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of France recently after a lengthy tour of the Dominion. The Diwan discounted the gloomy prophecies contained in Dean Inge's new book entitled "England."

For the third consecutive year the first aid team of the Canadian Pacific Police Constabulary at the Windsor Street Station, Montreal, carried off the "Gaullets Cup" symbolic of the highest mark obtained in the Quebec District C.P.R. first aid competition. The competitions were conducted at the Place Viger Hotel in Montreal, September 24th by Dr. Brantly, chief physician at the Canadian Pacific Hospital. The winners were in the field including two from the Angus Shops in Montreal, and one from Ottawa and Quebec.
